TEE MUSE.

The following lines are from the Freeman's Journal, of Philadelphia. It is a singular coincidence that at the very moment when we were about delivering to our compositor a manuscript copy of the very same verses, this number of the Philadelphia Journal was put into our hands. It is not the first time that " great wits jump together." In imitation of the corresponding version of Francis, the most latter at the early age of tifteen ; the English translator in the full tide and maturity of his genius. Concerning General Lewis Littlepage less has been written than he really deserved. He was a native of Virginia; once a secretary or protégé of Mr. Jay, with whom he subsequently quarrelled, and against whom be published those severe philippics which poured forth all the fire of his genius; he was at the siege of Gibraltar; he was well versed in almost all the courts of Europe; was particularly conversant with the court of St. Petersburg; was acquainted with Suwarrow and many of the great military men of Europe; and returned to his na-tive country with ample resources about the year 1802. He became a resident of the town of Fredericksburg, where he died in that year. Littlepage was a man of immense original powers, fraught with the most striking anecdotes of men and achievements, and to the last moment of his life exhibited that romantic and original cast of character which had distinguished his earlier adventures. Had such a man exerted his fine talents amidst the political scenes of his native countryin the vindication of her rights and her honor-he would have played a most distinguished part on the theatre of the public. The friends of General Littlepage (and he has several relations in Virginia) could not render us a more acceptable service than by laying before us the memoirs of the most eventful incidents of his romantic life. So much for the man-and now for the youthful poet.

The XXIId. Ode, Book 1, of Horace. The AAIId. One, Book 1, of Horace.

[Translated by Lewis Littlepage when only fourteen* years of age.]

Fuscus, the man whose quiet heart
No conscious crimes molest.

Needs not the Moor's envenomed dart
To guard his guiltless breast.

Safe may be range Getulia's sands, Virtue and truth his guides; Or where the desert Carma stands, Or fam'd Hydaspes glides. Late as I ranged the Sabine grove,
Beyond my asual bounds,
Whilst void of care I sung, my love,
In soft, melodious sounds.

Sudden I met (without defence) A wolf in derceness bred; But, awed by peaceful innocence, The savage monster fied.

Not thirsty Lybia's scorching fields, (1) Where tawny ilous feed. Nor warlike Daunia's oreary wilds

Remove me far from cheerful day Where not a bright celestial ray The awful gloom pervades.

Or place me near the solar blaze, (2)
Beneath the burning zone,
Where no refreshing breeze allays
The influence of the sun.

Still shall the memory of my love.(3) Her soft enchanting smile. Her tuneful voice my cares remove, And all my woes beguile. (4)

The man who knows not guilty fear, Nor wants the bow, nor pointed spear; Nor needs, while innocent of heart, The quiver, teeming with the poisoned dart, Whether thro' Lybia's burning sands His journey leads, or Scythia's lands, Inhospitable waste of snows, Or where the fabulous Hydaspes flows:

SAME ODE, BY FRANCIS

For musing on my lovely maid.
While carcless in the wood I strayed,
A wolf—how dreadful!—cross'd my way.
Yet fled—he fled from his defenceless prey.

No beast of such portentious size in warlike Dannis's forest lies, Nor such the tawny lion reigns Fierce on his native Afric's thirsty plains.

Place me where never summer breeze Unbinds the globe or warms the trees; Where ever lewering clouds appear, And angry Jove deforms the inclement year.

Place me beneath the burning ray, Where rolls the rapid car of Day; Love and the nymph shall charm my toils— The nymph who sweetly speaks and sweetly Variations.

* Fifteen says our MS.—Enquirer.
(1) Not scorch'd Numidia's thirsty fields.
(2) Or place me near the solar rays.
(3) Here is a stanza in our copy which is omitted in the Journal: Yet still my Lalzge shall reign
Triumphant in my breast;
Still her beloved, harmonious name
Shall lull my woes to rest.

(4) Here some triffing variations.

Editors Dispatch: May I ask a place in your issue of to-morrow for the following little poem, recalled to memory by the death of Miss Lulie Massie, whose sweet spirit made her to all who knew her in her beautiful life one of "the dear ones." W. CHASE MORTON.

Legend in Alsace.

Know'st thou, Gretchen, how it happens That the dear ones die? God walks daily in His garden, While the sun shines high;

While the sun shines high;
In that garden there are roses,
Beautiful and bright,
And he gazes round, delighted
With the lovely sight:
If He marks one gaily blooming,
Than the rest more fair,
He will pause and gaze upon it,
Full of tender care;
And the beauteous rose He gashers,
In His bosom iles—
But ou earth are tears and sorrow,
For a dear one dies. For a dear one dies.

The inventor of the phonograph says the speeches of our congressmen can be preserved in tin-foil and ground out for the de-lectation of future ages. It is going to be very unhealthy for the man who does the "grinding out" one hundred years hence, unless he performs the task in some faraway, lonely wood. The speeches now being made in Congress cannot die an hour too soon, and if future ages could know that it was proposed to preserve such harangues for their enjoyment, Edison, the inventor of the phonograph, would head a funeral procession in less than four days.-Norristown Herald.

When Mr. Billoney went home yesterday and saw a handsome bouquet reposing on one of the parlor chairs he mentally observed that it was a shame to let such beautiful flowers lie there to wither; so he took them up tenderly, procured a basin of water, and placed them carefully therein—and the same instant his wife gave a piercing shrick and fainted dead away. But it was too late. Mrs. Billoney's new spring flower-bonnet was attack waited. bonnet was utterly ruined.-Norristown

The Cineinnati Commercial conjures up this scene from the phonographic era: "Will you have ze cavating by Patti zis morning or ze Postilion songa by Wachtel?" "Move on, you beetle-browed garlic-eater, or I'll call the police. You're the forty-ninth man with a phonograph that's been here since daylight." [For the Dispatch.] A letter has been received by one of our citizens from Sir Charles A. Hartley, engineer of the Danube Commission, dated Sulina, April 15th, giving some gratifying information about the condition of that mouth of the Danube which has been in course of improvement for several years by the Governments who were parties to the treaty of Paris. It will be remembered that at the beginning of the recent war between Russia and Turkey that the Russians sunk obstructions across the Sulina branch of the Danube (the only branch navigable for vessels of deep draught) to prevent Turkish gunboats from ascending the river, and great apprehension was felt throughout Europe that this important improvement would be seriously damaged.

Sir Charles writes: "For months past this dam has exercised no influence whatever on the regime of the river." The obstruction was not continuous. Lighters were sunk with their keels parallel to the current, from twenty to sixty feet apart, the intervals crossed by chains fastened to their decks and to the shores, thus forming a bareditor of the Journal we have annexed the rier to vessels, but not forming a dam. The lighters were loaded with stone to about celebrated translator of the poems of Hor- low-water mark. This obstruction doubtace. The comparison will do no discredit less impeded the current, and threatened to the genius of the young Virginian—the, to turn a considerable amount of the flow into the other outlets. But as the intervals between the sunken lighters were not entirely covered with stone, the vessels were undermined and the exposed bed scoured away. This action continued until the area of cross section was restored, when no more injurious effect on the channel was to be feared. These sunken ships were blown up with gun-cotton, and the débris cleared away by the 27th of March; and since then-i. e., to April 15th-150 sea-going ships and steamers have passed up to Galatz and Braila; but the Russians still withhold an official notification of the fact that the river is completely free from torpedoes, which during the latter part of the war were thrown about broadcast in the lower reaches of the Sulina branch. The Sulina has not suffered sensibly by the so-called dam except in its immediate neighborhood, owing in part to the very clear condition of the water in the latter part of 1877; and a further expenditure of about $10,000 in training walls will permanently remove any deposits, so far as ascertained. The shoaling at and near the dam was about two feet. The channel at the Sulina mouth still maintains its capital depth of twenty and a balf feet at lowest water level, where before the improvement there were from seven to eleven feet, and rarely ever nine feet. The result is gratifying to the friends of the system of improvement advocated by Sir Charles, and for the past success of which he was knighted by Queen Victoria.

Besides the counterfeit $100 bill on the New Bedford Bank there is another one in circulation in the West, supposed to be from the same plate, on the Revere National Bank, of Boston.

The Boston police have arrested a gang of burglars for the robbery of a safe from the house of Ephraim Otis, in South Sitwell, on the 29th ultimo. Mr. Otis's nephew is among those arrested. In addition to the coinage of the silver dollar the Philadelphia mint will this month | rily endorsed. coin a number of balf and quarter eagles. Fame is tardy in reaching some men, but if a man is deserving it is bound to strike bim sooner or later. A Berks county editor has had a blue-and-red canal-boat named after him .- Norristown Herald.
